That's really cool mix up of max payne (stranglehold actually), hotline miami and enter the gungeon (you can dodge over bullets, enemies too). Slowmo, nice particles of blood and sparks, music is pretty fitting. Be ready for boss fights. great game, reminds bomberman with great community

What is needed:

more maps pls

fix bugs (meet with them often enough)

system to add friends pls<3

BUT MET THE BEST COMMUNITY HERE (LOVE U RACOON<3). Mini-guide: if you hear "Sierra" and think of mountains rather than epic questing, check out the mini-guide below my review.

I never played Gold Rush back in the day but I'm fairly certain it would have taken me a bit longer than 5 hours to complete when I was a kid. There was no internet, no Windows, no mouse interface. Joysticks optional. I estimate about 5 months, and probably only after getting hold of some walkthrough,

If you've never played one of the original Sierra games, you may find Gold Rush incredibly frustrating but take the time to learn the basics (see below) and you will fall in love with the depth and humour of these deceptively simple looking adventures.

Gold Rush is a classic adventure game, running beautifully via dosbox. There is no mouse interface whatsoever, keyboard (or joystick) only. I had so much fun with this. I recommend it without hesitation to anyone who remembers using DOS, and encourage anyone who doesn't but who loves adventures and puzzles to to give it a go.

How to play (a mini-guide):

You control a sprite called Jerrod Wilson. He moves around his environment which is split into a grid of "rooms", each of which is the size of an olden-days computer monitor screen. If he goes to the very left of the screen, that moves him into the next "room". He can enter doors and buildings in one "room" which take him to another.

Jerrod has a story but you don't learn the details up front. You have to work it out by exploring, and examining items and reading various material. The story matters. The details and dialogues are important.

Before you begin: Grab a pen and paper. If you want a map to help navigate, you need to draw it yourself. Write anything down that might be important, or to remind yourself of something later. Gold Rush is actually pretty light on these requirements. The map areas are small, and there is only one important number to remember - but there are lots of clues that might not seem obvious at first Movement: arrow keys or numpad. You can even move diagonally, unless you're playing on my laptop, which doesn't have a numpad, in which case, get off my laptop.

Interaction: keyboard only. Very little automatic interaction. I think most unlocked doors will automatically open when you approach them but that's it. Typing involves either a command (eg "look" to get a textual description of the area) or a verb/noun combination (eg "look man" to look at a man).

Common verbs: look (abbreviated to "l"), look at, look in, look on, look under, talk, get ("g"), put, push, pull, open, close. Examples: open letter, look under rug, get mule.

Spelling matters! F3 repeats the last command. LOOK AT everything. Everything you can see will have an accompanying description. It's going to be hard to see some things.

Type HELP in game, or hit F1 to see the in-game help text.

Number one rule: Save your game, save, save, save and then save again just to be sure. You will die a lot. F5 saves your game, F7 loads your saved game ("restore"), F9 restarts. If you're not sure if something was meant to happen or not, just F7. Use every save slot.

The game is brutal. You have 14 minutes at the beginning of the game to get things sorted before prices explode and you need to restart. If you don't have the right syntax you potentially miss something important. A lot of things won't seem intuitive if you haven't played these kinds of games before. Almost finished but you forgot to grab something at the beginning? You can't go back, so you have to start over.

You will be very tempted to use a walkthrough. They are just so accessible now. My suggestion is, play an area (like Brooklyn) through on your own, and before you leave, check to make sure you did everything you were supposed to. That's how I played because I wasn't in the mood to tear my hair out in clumps.

There are often multiple ways to solve a problem. One choice is not necessarily better than another.

Hope you love this experience.. This game is awesome I love that it's connected with the other GameHouse games but I dislike that you don't get cleaning bonuses.. free\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665is never bad. that being said, i'd totally buy a coop dlc.. This game reminds me of Runescape Classic for some reason. Its fun if you can get past the odd controls.. There are a few newer Luxor-games, but I didn't like them. This one is very good though.

Amazing game, i recommended. A nice new surprise to the gaming market. Some independent software makers created a very nice science fiction tank combat and football (soccer) style combination in a game. The game runs smooth and has some nice combat on a Tron style gaming grids (read maps).. A good game for kids. Really enjoyed this - a great vr demo to showcase. There is no mouse sensitivity adjustment in this game. The default speed is sluggish and might put a lot of players off. I had to turn up the speed of my mouse pointer to the fastest through windows control panel. That helped a bit. I also have a trackball, so I may not notice it as much as someone with a conventional mouse.

Apart from that, I found it to be a very enjoyable game. It has some quirks with physics at times, most notably the rubble, which behaves more like Styrofoam than rendered stone and concrete; especially so, when you try to load it into a machine bucket. However, I've seen nothing that detracts too much from the fun of blowing stuff up or tearing it down.

There is a multitude of vehicles and tools to aid your rabid structural rendering needs and placing twelve packs of C4 in a building and blowing it to pieces can get quite ♥♥♥♥♥ic...

Progression from a lowly sledge wielding navvy, to a wreaking-ball slinging titan, felt natural and without too much obvious grind. Do the job, follow the rules (or break them), rake in the cash.

If you see it on sale, or you believe you may have a penchant for sending several tons of rubble sailing over the rooftops several hundred meters away, or kicking a dump truck into high gear and ramming it through a building, I'd probably pick it up if I was you.

Overall I score it 7/10.. first review! :D

new card pack is awesome.. Probably the quirkiest offering in recent years, a girl detectives mystery story set in the 1920s, presented as a board game with challenges in the form of card-based minigames. Utterly charming!
